Under the magic spell of saw and hammer and the skillful application of the decorator's art, Convention Hall's great barnlike inclosure stands to-day transformed into a veritable dreamland, radiin color, artistically simple and chaste in design, and all but in reading for President Roosevelt to press the key errow evening that will cast upor the spectacle the glow of thousands of electric lights and officially open the great Masonic Fair to the public of Washington

Constructively, little remains to be done, but to-day and to-morrow hordes of members of the different local chapters and lodges of the order will swarm abou the booths and pavilions, preparing their displays in the most attractive manner in anticipation of separating the casual visitor from his gold for the good of the cause—the Masonic Temple fund.

Canopy of Four Immense Flags. The old, iron-girded hall never pre sented a more attractive spectacle than the visitors tomorrow evening will be hered in upon. The great arched roof is hidden by the expanse of four of the largest American flags ever made. With of these enormous flags street out to the four corners of the hall and droop in brilliant folds to the floor. Each flag measures 100 by 200 feet, and the Now Giving Much Attention to New Booth's Farm Agency Gives Reasons four together would nearly envelop the Washington Monument from base to
